The Founding of the Republican Workers Party

The Republican Workers Party was founded in 1878 in Chicago, Illinois. The party was founded by a group of labor leaders who were dissatisfied with the Republican and Democratic parties' lack of support for workers' rights.

The founding members of the Republican Workers Party included:

The Rise of the Republican Workers Party

The Republican Workers Party quickly gained support among workers in the Midwest and East. The party ran candidates for office in a number of states, and in 1884, the party's presidential candidate, Alson J. Streeter, received over 140,000 votes.

The Republican Workers Party's success was due in part to the party's strong organization. The party had a network of local clubs and chapters, and it was able to mobilize voters on Election Day.

The Republican Workers Party also benefited from the growing labor movement in the United States. In the late 19th century, workers were increasingly organizing into unions and demanding better wages and working conditions. The Republican Workers Party was able to tap into this growing movement and gain the support of many workers.

major elections. The party's presidential candidate, Alson J. Streeter, received only 140,000 votes in 1884, and the party's gubernatorial candidates fared no better.

Another factor that contributed to the decline of the Republican Workers Party was the growing popularity of the Populist movement. The Populist movement advocated for a number of reforms that were popular with farmers and workers, and the Republican Workers Party was unable to compete with the Populist movement's appeal.
